

The Prodigal Son

There was once a man who was very rich. He had two sons, and he also had many servants.

One day, his younger son came to him and said, “Dad, I am ready to go out on my own. I would like my half of my inheritance so I can leave here.”

The boy's father was sad, but he gave his son the money and allowed him to leave.

The younger son left immediately, and he began to spend his money on everything he wanted. He bought fancy clothes, and he bought the best food. Before long, he ran out of money.

Once his money was gone, he realized he had made a mistake, and he looked for a job.

However, the only job he could find was working for a farmer slopping pigs. The job paid very little, and that area was in a severe famine. The boy started wishing he could eat the food the pigs were eating because he was so hungry.

Before long, he decided he would leave that place and go back to his father's house. He said, “My father's servants are treated much better than this. I will return home, and I will ask my father to make me a servant.”

The boy returned home, and his father saw him coming. He ran out to meet him, and threw his arms around his son, crying, and happy that he had come home.

The boy said, “Father, I have sinned. I have come back to ask you if I could be a servant.”

The father said, “My son! You have returned home. Kill the fattened calf! We're going to have a party! My son was dead, and now he's alive!”

The son was welcomed back, and it was as if he had never left.
